SceneDeal connects content discovery with conversations between creators and buyers

A content marketplace for exploring works, reviewing rights and delivery terms, and finding the next partner.

SceneDeal, a global content marketplace operated by Vietnam-based Isaac Studio, brings creators and buyers into one space to discover works, review available information and start conversations. The service connects producers introducing completed content with buyers looking for their next story.

The marketplace covers short dramas, films, AI dramas, AI films, short webtoons and animation. Visitors can explore work descriptions and public materials, learn about production companies and contact the relevant creator. Works and projects marked SAMPLE are fictional demonstrations, not evidence of completed sales or real commercial campaigns.

Beyond discovery, buyers and creators can discuss the details that shape a potential agreement. These may include pricing, contract duration, global or regional rights, exclusivity, revenue sharing and delivery requirements. Account-based conversations and proposal records help participants follow the discussion and revisit its terms.

SceneDeal also includes a project marketplace for production requests, pre-purchase opportunities and investment proposals. These features support the presentation and discussion of project terms; they do not establish that financing has been completed or guarantee returns. Payment and escrow functions are currently demonstrations and do not accept, hold, disburse or refund real funds.

The platform brings content presentation and partner discovery together. Visitors can review current service information on the About and Guide pages, then explore available works and production companies at scenedeal.com. Rights and contractual terms require confirmation and agreement between the parties.
